Reagan's MX Dilemma: Missile Vulnerability

By Leslie H. Gelb New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President ision on modernizing the U.S. strategic nuclear arsenal leaves him on the horns of a dilemma: It is based on continued belief that land-based missiles are vulnerable to a Soviet first strike, yet the programs it sets in motion will do virtually nothing to reduce that theoretical vulnerability.

According to some Pentagon experts, the president's plan to build the MX missile, place it in existing silos and pour more concrete to harden them against blast, represents a giant step away from a solution. To them, safety can come only from mobility, and Mr. Reagan has scrapped that approach for now. In his own confirmation hearings this year. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said that the land-based missile is vulnerable because its location is fixed, it is detectable by Soviet satellites and is capable of being struck by accurate Soviet missiles.

At that time. Mr. Weinberger said what most strategic experts would now say: "I would feel that simply putting it into the existing would not answer two or three of the concerns that I have; namely, that these are well known and are not hardened sufficiently, nor could they be, to be of sufficient strategic value to count as a strategic improvement of our LONDON — The Irish nationalist prisoners' hunger strike, in which 10 men have died since May, has been called off. The prisoners said they had reluctantly concluded that the families of the men on the fast would keep on refusing to let them die.

"We have been robbed of the hunger strike as an effective protest weapon principally because of the successful campaign waged against our distressed relatives by the Catholic hierarchy." the Irish Republican Army prisoners said in a statement issued Saturday night. Prime Minister Margaret

Thatcher, who was awakened with the news in Australia, where she was attending the Commonwealth conference, was careful not to take a boastful stance, but the collapse of the hunger strike was regarded by many as a vindication of her firm refusal to grant the prisoners the political status that they had

The strike focused world attention on the IRA's struggle to drive the British out of Ireland. As the around the world, especially the United States.

It has also had a corrosive effect on relations between the Protestant majority and the Roman Catholic minority in the province. And, in Britain, it has opened a de-bate on the constitutional future of the province, with more Britons talking openly of giving up North-ern Ireland, a suggestion that used to be politically unthinkable.

In the end, the hunger strikers were undone by their families, who increasingly refused to let their sons and brothers die. The finance ministers agreed on a 5.5 percent upward revaluation within the EMS of the Deutsche mark and Dutch guilder and a 3 percent devaluation of the French franc and Italian lira, Finance Minister Robert Vandeputte of Belgium said.

The accord — the most signifi-cant adjustment of EMS parities since the system's inception in March, 1979 — followed eight hours of bargaining. The realignment is an attempt to end recent pressures within the EMS caused by diverging econom-ic policies and performances as hington Post Service JIDDA - Saudi Arabia, in its most detailed statement so far on the AWACS controversy, has insisted it would reject "any sharing" with regard to the sophisticated radar planes if they are sold to the Saudi Air Force.

The declaration, issued Saturday by the Foreign Ministry, represent-ed the Saudi version of what the Reagan administration has been describing as an agreed position of the U.S. and Saudi governments on the proposed $8.5-billion pack-age sale submitted for congression-

Following the Haig-Saud meeting, the State Department was vague on the question of actual guarantees on the personnel issue. Its statement said the "kingdom is requesting maintenance and training assistance, and the U.S. is willing to provide such assistance which will be necessary for the support of the system well into the 1990s."

The theme of national sovereignty and refusal of what the Saudi rubers regard as congressional attempts to infringe upon it under-lay the position outlined in Saturday's statement. This has been a major Saudi concern throughout the debate as congressmen have insisted on U.S. controls over securi-ty and use of the AWACS.

Mr. Haig reportedly told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in a closed briefing Thursday of a U.S.-Saudi "understanding" providing for an American presence on the AWACS aircraft well into the 1990s." But many commit-The statement appeared to have tee members said it was their im-

Without mentioning training periods or U.S. personnel at all, Saturday's Saudi statement indirectly cknowledged concerns of some U.S. congressmen that selling the AWACS and other equipment in the proposed package could ex-pose them to the danger of falling into hostile hands.

The kingdom is fully concerned with the security and safety of the equipment in the package in par-ticular, and defense equipment in general, and welcomes mutual understanding and cooperation in that regard," it said.

But it appeared that this formu-lation talks short of an explicit guarantee that U.S. personnel would be connected with the planes into the 1990s, as demanded by congressional opponents of the sale.

Saudi officials repeatedly have rejected the idea of an explicit guarantee of a U.S. presence, sayereignty. At the same time, diplomats here say the Saudi rulers would probably agree to prolong U.S. association with the planes if

The government said that the price increases disclosed Saturday evening had been decided "follow ing consultations with the trade unions." The announcement caused near pandemonium at the congress with delegates accusing union leaders of a sellout.

Mr. Walesa took the floor and denied that the union leadership had approved the price rise. In his telegram to the premier, he protested that the decision had been made without the union's accept-

Urgent Talks Between Rich, Poor Nations Called for by Leaders of Commonwealth

By William Branigin

Washington Post Service
MELBOURNE — Representatives of 41 nations Sonday called on the rest of the world to support urgent new talks between rich and poor countries to deal with worsening global economic disparities. The appeal came in a joint declaration by leaders of the Com-monwealth of Nations, which includes Britain and its former colonies. Issued in Canberra during the leaders' weekend retreat, the "Melbourne Declaration" expressed a need for "real and significant changes commensurate with the urgency of the problems we now face."

The declaration stopped short of mentioning any specific measures, however, and a controversy erupt-ed when one commonwealth leader, Prime Minister Robert Mul-doon of New Zealand, called it a "declaration of platitudes" that did not have his final approval. Commonwealth officials said the document was a "political statement" and that specific economic issues such as food, finance, trade and energy would be ad-dressed in the final communiqué of the commonwealth conference in the declaration, the commonwealth leaders said it was "im-perative to revitalize the dialogue between developed and developing countries." It said the world's "gross inequality of wealth and op-portunity" and an "unbroken car-cle of poverty" in developing countries constituted "fundamental sources of tension and instability in the world."

The statement said the leaders "firmly believe that the choice is not between change and no change but between timely, adequate man-aged change and disruptive, involuntary change imposed by break-down and conflict."

In a separate statement, Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser of Australia made it clear that the declaration was intended to give im-petus to this month's North-South

Fragile Victories

In two ways, the victories last week by what is now being called the center-right of the Labor Party were dangerously fragile - by very narrow margins and confined mainly to organizational matters. In no important way did they af-fect the leftward course of party policy, which may still make it difiscult for Labor to campaign effec-tively against Mrs. Thatcher in the next election, probably in October,

The center-right succeeded in defeating Mr. Benn, whose candidacy was bitterly opposed by Michael Foot, the party leader, largely because 16 members of a left-wing faction abstained rather than interest accounted of which the control of the contr signify approval of what they con-sidered Mr. Benn's disruptive tae

Mr. Benn lost control of the National Executive Committee, the principal element of the party machine, because one union, the Amalgamated Union of Engineer ing Workers, threw its 875,000 votes to the right and deposed five committee left-wingers. And Mr. Bean saw his cherished hope of depriving the right-wing parlia-mentary Labor Party of its role in drafting the electoral platform, or manifesto, disappear with the last-minute switch of votes by another big union. As the experience of the last two years has shown, the bloc votes of trade unions can swing back and forth as a result of internal power struggles, so these center-right victories are not permanent Furthermore, the center-right majority on the executive committee, 15-14, holds only where domestic policy is concerned; on such significant matters as unilateral nuclear disarmament and withdrawal from the European Economic Community, the left retains control. The policies voted by the conference reflected this murky situation, and

Labor Commitments

Labor is now committed, probably unalterably, to pulling out of the Common Market without a referendum, with all the economic and diplomatic complexities that would entail. It is committed, strongly but not as definitively, to abandoning nuclear weapons, foreing the United States to withdraw its nuclear naval and air force bases and cutting defense spending sharply.

Mr. Foot supports some of these olicies; he is, after all, an old bero of the Left, and it is a measure of the party's leftward movement that he is now counted as a man of the center. But the most prominent right-wing leaders in the House of Commons - Mr. Healey, Peter Shore and Roy Hattersley - find most of these policies impossible to swallow.

Mr. Benn's plans remain unknown. If he responds to Mr. Foot's pleas to take a place in the new shadow Cabinet, he intends to regard himself as the defender of left-wing conference decisions rather than as a part of a team prepared to accept collective responsi-bility for parliamentary strategy. The AWACS Deal: What Will Saudis Do if It Collapses?

By Joseph Fitchett International Herald Tribune LONDON - A crucial question in the debate on the sale of AWACS to Saudi Arabia is whether the Saudis Arabians, if af-

Although Sheikh Yamani declined to link Saudi Arabia's oil policy to the AWACS issue, Mr. Akins, who in the past has often publicized views that Saudi leaders held strongly but hestitated to voice publicly, warned of major disruptions ahead because of

The use of the word exchange and the mention that the security of both countries would be involved seemed to suggest that on some subjects, such as Israel, the Saudi leadership would feel no obligation to share intelligence with the United States. There was no claboration on the statement from ministry officials.

Also unclear was an assertion that Mr. Saud "pointed out to his American counterpart that the kingdom does not accept any sharing with regard to these aircraft." it was not certain whether the statement was referring to con-cerns in Washington that Saudi Arabia might pass intelligence to other Arab countries for use against Israel, or whether it was ruling out any idea that the United States and Saudi Arabia might operate the planes jointly.

Because of the demands in Congress for joint command or crewing in the aircraft, the statement ruling out sharing was seen as a renewed refusal to accept any joint U.S.-Saudi controls over the planes despite the talk in Washington of U.S. crewmen being present

Israeli Influence

In addition, U.S. opinion is in-fluenced by Israel's supporters, who Mr. Akins says are campaigning against AWACS less because they fear the aircraft then because they seek to prevent U.S.-Saudi co-operation from growing.

Mr. Akins, John C. West and Robert G. Neumann all said a con-gressional veto could jeopardize the current stability in the energy Many U.S. analysts contend the energy crisis is over and that the cil weapon is obsolete. They say cil has reached a ceiling where any plementary argument to the highly publicized Reagan administration point that the radar surveillance price rise would be counterproductive, accelerating the Western conversion to alternative fuels and furplanes could help provide military control of the Gulf. The three warned that an AWACS fiasco ther reducing oil demand. Saudi Arabia, these commentators say, needs to keep selling oil to pay for development and imports. Its leaders have invested too much in the West to jeopardize the world economy.

But other analysts, close to Saudi thinking, warn that a U.S. re-buff to Saudi Arabia would disbuff to Saudi Arabia would discredit the strongly pro-American thrust of recent Saudi policies — including oil policy. In self-defense, the Saudi leadership would have to react by adopting less generous oil policies. In addition, it could damage U.S. military and commercial involvement in Saudi Arabia, even prompting Saudi leaders to conclude the United States could never be a reliable

Market Is Flooded

Saudi Arabia's intentions are obscured by the fact that Saudi dential campaign said Mr. Reagan leaders have their own economic reasons for trying to impose a poli-cy of moderation on oil prices. To do this, Saudi Arabia has flooded the market with Saudi while oil de-Reagan had said the same thing in mand was falling because of Westforeign policy operatives of the ad-ministration, if not in formal meetern recession, fuel economies and expectations, still unproven, of non-OPEC sources of oil.

In this way, Saudi Arabia is taming the OPEC price hawks, a policy that has a strong long-term commercial justification. Sheikh Yamani, speaking to the energy conference, publicized the Saudi case for moderation. He said that this policy was designed to protect the long-term market for oil exports and stimulate international economic recovery. A price freeze is essential, he said, to revive oil demand and let prices gradually start rising again.

His words had the desired effect his Western audience. "You could hear those corporate planners mentally shelving their planned investments in alternative fuel sources as Sheikh Zaki reassured them about Sandi moderation," a participant said.

A Different View

But his remarks could also be interpreted as corroborating the views of Western economists who contend that the oil glut is permanent and that Saudi Arabia is acting out of its economic interest to keep prices low and protect its long-term asset with the implication that Saudi Arabia to alternatives, a lot of countries therefore does "not deserve any fa-vors" from the United States, such abandoned his prepared text to offer his own interpretation of Saudi oil policy, which he cast in a different light from the Saudi minister.

"What he said was not incorrect, but it is just not the whole story," Mr. Akins said. He asserted that the primary motivation of Saudi Arabia's oil policy — which has been unpopular with other Arabs, other OPEC governments and many Saudi Arabians — was the pursuit of political benefits from the United States.

Reviewing the near-decade of Saudi oil power since the Middle East war in 1973, Mr. Akins said that Saudi financial and oil policy has been dictated to please the United States. "We asked Saudi Arabia to produce more oil, to hold down oil prices and to defend the dollar," he said. "The Saudis' response has been consistently and dramatically positive in all fields."

These policies entailed many costs for Saudi Arabia, including social strains caused by rapid en-richment, but King Khaled and Crown Prince Fahd adopted a strongly pro-American line for po-litical reasons, Mr. Akins said. While seeking an implicit pact, he said, the Saudi Arabians were "naive" because there was "no bargaining, no commitments, no quid pro quo's — just the desert as-sumption that if you do a good you twice over."

The repayment sought by the Saudis, he said, is a change of U.S. policy to produce a Middle East settlement acceptable to the Arabs and covering the occupied West Bank, the Palestinian problem and Jerusalem.

'Most Arabs have agreed with these political goals, but they have not been obtained, and now there is criticism even inside Saudi Ara-bia," Mr. Akins said. Other sources said the frictions reach into the Sandi royal family.

If the administration cannot deliver the AWACS promised to Saudi Arabia both by President Jimmy Carter and by President Reagan, Mr. Akins predicted that the Sandi leadership would move to protect itself from its critics. "They will have to react because they will not be taken seriously if they don't," he said, "and the only place they can react so we will notice is oil

Asked why Saudi Arabia has refrained from taking public um-brage over previous U.S. policy actions contrary to Saudi interests. Some Western diplomats said that the Soviet leadership was probably relieved that President Reagan had dropped the Carter administration plan for a mobile basing system for the MX in favor of deployment in fixed sites. According to the diplomats, MX deployment in hardened silos probably presents less of a challenge to Soviet strategists.

The diplomats said the fixed-site approach was likely to prove less demanding of the Kremlin's resources of finance and technology, areas in which the Russians have been showing signs of strain.

The president's choice of a silobased system for the MX evidently came as a surprise in Moscow, since Saturday's issue of Pravda, which went to press earlier, still referred to the mobile basing concept as "the Pentagon's new toy." Public Not Told

Australians Fear That the Worst Is Yet to Come in Scandal on Beef Exports

By William Branigin Washington Post Service

MELBOURNE - As scandals go, it has the makings of a classic; a slowly unraveling string of revelations, suspicion of a cover-up and a central figure named Nixon.

It also has a catchy name. The opposition in Parliament has dubbed it "slaughtergate." Other elements of the story include a squabble over states' rights and memories of a long-dead race horse. But these are only peripheral to the main aspects of the scandal; the potential damage to millions of dollars in trade and to Australia's international image.

Several weeks after U.S. officials found horse and kangaroo meat in Australian beef shipped to the United States, the scandal is still reverberating here. The government has been pressured into forming a commission to investigate the affair, and revelations about meat substitution for the domestic market are widely expected.

In an effort to restore foreign confidence in Australia's $1.3 billion-a-year meat export industry, the minister responsible for the industry, Peter Nixon, is making a world tour. The opposition Labor Party has called for his resigCritics charge that the government of Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser has tried to contain the scandal at every turn, only to see it lurch out of control. Although as yet still only a side issue, the scandal has added to pressures on the government from inside and outside the governing coalition. Political observers see the scandal as contributing to allegations of maladministra-tion by the Fraser government and criticism of his coalition partner, the National Country Party. Both Mr. Nixon and his controversial predecessor as minister for primary industry, an Sinclair, are members of the party.

Especially damaging have been revelations that Mr. Nixon knew of allegations about ille-gal practices in the meat industry for as long as year before the scandal broke and that the federal police. Australia's equivalent of the FBL had been aware of such charges since

The issue first surfaced publicly in 1977 when Sen. Cyril Primmer brought it up in Par-liament. The Labor Party member from Victo-ria, the state where the scandal originated, said meat substitution was taking place, named the companies involved and described how it was

The matter was referred to Mr. Sinclair, sion early last month, the case has taken some then minister for primary industry, who later released a brief statement saying that a police investigation showed there was nothing to the

Disclosed in U.S.

Government opponents say that when the scandal did break, as a result of disclosures in the United States, the Australian administration compounded it by trying to contain it.

"The minister wasn't prepared to do anything at first," said John Kerin, the Labor Party spokesman on primary industry. "He just didn't seem to take it seriously."

Under pressure, the administration set up an interdepartmental committee to look into the scandal. When that was criticized as madequate, the government turned over the matter to a police investigation, sent Mr. Nixon over-seas and finally acceded to opposition de-mands for a full judicial inquiry by a royal commission. Similar to a U.S. grand jury, the royal commission will have the power to sub-poena witnesses and conduct a full-scale inves-tigation.

Since the opposition called for the comnew twists. After the acknowledgments that Mr. Nixon and the federal police had already known of the allegations, Mr. Nixon announced the suspension for 30 days of export operations by all meat processing plants in Victoria State.

At the same time, police in Victoria leaked word that meat exporters in the state had been consistently tipped off about when U.S. officials were to arrive to conduct spot checks of Anstralian plants processing meat for the United States. Later in the month Mr. Nixon amounced the discovery of more horsemeat mixed with U.S.-bound beef.

Small Percentage

Officials in the Ministry for Primary Industry say the United States buys about 60 percent of Australia's total meat exports, amount ing to $700 million during the 1980-81 fiscal year, but that the three illegal processors dis-covered so far accounted for less than 1 percent of the exports to the United States.

The government's apparent reluctance to expose the malpractices has been seized by the opposition to hint darkly of more sinister mo-

Mr. Kerin last month was quoted as alluding to allegations "including not only fraud on a massive scale, but possible corruption at an official level and a political cover-up to protect supporters of the National Country Party."

So far police have arrested one man in the case, a manager of one of the three Melbourne companies from which all the adulterated beef found up to now has originated.

Eating Roo

Although the substitutions have been discovered only in meat bound for export, many Australians believe further investigations will show the practice to be more widespread. "I suspect we have been eating a lot of froe meat and not knowing it," said Mr. Kerin, using the Australian term for kangaroo meat.

For Australians, the thought of eating kangaroo meat is not as disconcerting as for Americans. Although not on the menus of most city restaurants, it is commonly eaten in the rough interior region called the outback and has been a staple in the diets of aborigines for thousands of years.

One reason that the export market has been the focus of attention is that Australia has a government inspection system only for foreign-bound meat. A dispute over states' rights has prevented the Australian government from extending the system to the domestic market

Despite the potentially sersous impact on the meat export industry, some Australians de-tive mischievous satisfaction from putting one over on the Americans. This is where the race horse comes in.

'Phar Lap's Revenge'

It seems that in the 1930s an Australian horse named Phar Lap was winning every race in sight here when its owners decided to go for the big money in the United States.

But after winning a big race in California the mighty gelding suddenly died. Australians were convinced Phar Lap was poisoned by. American horse owners. So popular was the horse that a newspaper ran the headline "Nation Mourns." Phar Lap's heart was enshrined the headline of Australian Caphera and at the Institute of Anatomy in Canberra and its hide hung in a Melbourne museum.

Australians have never forgotten the borse's mysterious death. And so the adulterated-beef, scandal has received another nickname: "Phar Lap's revenge."

Venezuela at Crossroad 🚟 After Betancourt Death

By Juan de Onis

International Herald Tribune CARACAS — The death of Rómulo Betancourt, who led Venezuela out of dictatorship into a phuralist democracy, has come at a critical moment in the political life of this country.

A throng of mourners accompanied the funeral procession Friday of the former president and founder of the Democratic Action Party who died at age 73. Leading the procession to the cemetery, beyond the skycrapers and freeway interchanges of this modern capi-tal, was President Luis Herrera Campins, of the Social Christian

What most Venezuelans realized --- even many who came of age after Mr. Betancourt's presidency of 1960-1964 — was that the country had lost a figure of moral stature and historical importance, who cannot be matched in the present generation of political leadership.

Mr. Betancourt, during a political career spanning 40 years, was inflexible in opposition to the military dictatorships that ruled Venezuela. But in pursuit of his ideal of democratic government, he was a master of consensus with other

Puffing on the briar that became his political symbol, Mr. Betan-court would say: "Politics is not a battle between Roman gladiators to see who will die first. It is a confrontation of ideas."

In preparing the overthrow in 1958 of the military dictatorship of Col. Marcos Pérez Jiménez, which was supported by foreign oil com-panies and the U.S. secretary of state then, John Foster Dulles, Mr. Betancourt built an understanding with Rafael Caldera, the Social Christian leader, and other democratic groups of the left. That understanding has remained the foundation of constitutional rule, with alternation of parties in pow-

In office, Mr. Betancourt ran an administration free from the scandals of corruption, which is a major problem in a country where the state's oil revenues, now over $18 billion a year, are the largest source of contracts, jobs and political favors.

As Venezuela prepares for national elections in 1983, the two big parties, the Democratic Action Party and the Social Christian Party, continue to dominate the political scene. The socialist MAS, led by former pro-Cuban guerrillas who now sit in Congress, is a dis-

There is a widespread feeling that the democratic parties have failed to administer Veneznela's oil bonanza efficiently and bave wasted enormous sums in failed projects, political subsidies

The leadership of the Democratic Action Party is in dispute now that Mr. Betancourt is no longer the senior arbiter of rival claims.

With inflation reaching 20 perWr. Pérez is the most popular fig-

In the eulogies showered on Mr. Betancourt by speakers and in Venezuela's press, the recurrent theme has been that the example of Mr. Betancourt, as an honest public figure and a skillful compromiser, must somehow take hold within the new generation of political leaders — if 17 million Venezuelans are to keep their faith in democracy as a way to achieve

U.S. Doctors Find Clot-Dissolving Drug Aids Treatment of Heart Attack Victims

STRASBOURG, France - Parliamentarians speaking at the Council of Europe condemned the composition of the Turkish constituent assembly, which is due to start drawing up a new constitu-tion in Ankara later this month.

French, Dutch and British Socialists and Italian Communists told the council's Parliamentary Assembly that the Turkish body, whose members are to be chosen by military rulers, bore no relation to democracy. a partial transcript of a White House tape recording of the con-versation in which Mr. Nixon endorsed a suggestion that "thugs" from the International Brotherhood of Teamsters be used to assault the protesters.

The transcript, published in The New York Times on Sept. 24, dis-closed a conversation in which the president and H.R. Haldeman, then his chief of staff, discussed a suggestion by Mr. Haldeman that Teamsters be hired to "go in end knock their heads off," as Mr. Haldeman put it.

In addition, no one knows what the law will cost or where the money to pay the fees will come from. No funds have been appropriated, and it is unclear whether the money will come from agen-

Steve Babcock of the U.S. Administrative Conference, which is acting as a consultant to the government agencies as they draw up their rules for paying the fees, said some estimates are running as high as $400 million for the first year. But he added that it will probably be considerably less. Estimates prepared for Congress indicated that the government is losing about one out of every five cases that come before federal district, claims, customs and appeals courts. The estimates assumed that the government would have to pay costs in about 25 percent of the cases it lost.

In hearings before the agencies' administrative law judges the loss rate is much higher, 55 percent, and the estimates assumed that the government would also have to pay fees in about 25 percent of those lost cases.

As Conservatives Move In, Norway Debates How Rapidly It Should Develop Oil and Gas

By Axel Krause

OSLO - A controversy over future development of Norway's oil and gas is expected to resurface as the Storting (parliament) meets this week for the first time since elections last month.

Key decisions by the new conservative minority government — which could have broad economic and strategic aignificance for Norway and other Western industrialized nations - are expected to emerge from the debates, senior Norwegian government, parlia-mentary and business leaders said in recent interviews.

A crucial question is whether Norway should sharply boost overall oil and gas production. Growth rates now are slowly flattening of-

The slowdown is coming mainly in the North Sea's Ekofish fields, which last year accounted for roughly 74 percent of Norway's to-tal oil and gas production.

Norwegian leaders agreed with the diplomat that the potential is enormous, noting the North Sea area is widely recognized as the most important new oil and gas region outside the Middle East.

This year's combined oil and gas production will total a record 50.5 million metric tons and, according to plans approved by the outgoing Labor government, the total will rise to about 65 million tons in the second half of the decade. Under the Labor-controlled Storting, a ceiling of 90 million metric tons was set for 1990.

Taxes and royalties generated by oil and gas production will total a record $6 billion this year, equal to roughly 15 percent of Norway's GNP and roughly one third of the nation's total export earnings, government officials said.

But with oil revenues, Norway showed a record budget deficit of more than $3 billion in 1981. The outlook is similar in 1982, according to government estimates.

Senior government and industry officials emphasized that the current production expansion repre-sented a sharp slowdown from growth rates of the past several

Pressures to Expand

Additional pressures are coming from Western energy planners, including Ulf Lantzke, secretary general of the International Energy Agency. In a speech in Oslo earlier this year and in subsequent statements, Mr. Lantzke has regularly urged that Norway develop some of its big gas fields to the point of production, which could be con-sumed or held in reserve for a future energy crisis.

Similarly, in Washington, Reagan administration officials have viewed Norwegian oil and gas reserves as a handy and logical al-ternative to the Soviet Union's ex-panding efforts to sell additional natural gas supplies to Western Europe.

"We are not pushing Norway very hard or very openly, since it is their decision to make, but the administration has not hidden its view on getting Norway to consid-er more rapid expansion," a senior U.S. official said.

It is too early to assess in which direction the new parliament and the government will move, considering the new political complexi-ties created by last month's elections, political observers said. Mr. Willoch and his party still have not resolved long-standing differences with other non-Socialist parties.

The Christian People's and Cen-ter parties said last month that

The lame-duck Labor government decided after the elections that Statoil should take over the operator role in the offshore Statiford field, the largest discov-ered yet in the North Sea. Last week, Mr. Willoch indicated that he definitely plans to avoid rushing into decison on that issue.

Mobil Oil of the United States, which was originally designated as operator and owns 12.6 percent of the venture, said the decision was "over hasty" and urged a full investigation.

"Having worked on the project over the years, we felt we had earned the right to maintain our role as operator," a Mobil spokes-man said. The company's conces-sion agreement gives the state to right to transfer the operator's role to Statoil which has a 42 percent shareholding, any time after Aug-

"If you look at our record, you will see what we are capable of doing," he said, adding that there was no change in his earlier predictions that Statoil's after-tax earnings will climb sharply to a record 1 billion kroner ($184 million) this year on record turnover of 12 billion kroner.

Meanwhile, it was noted that the new Cabinet, announced Thursday, included Vidkunn Hveding as energy minister. Although a Con-servative, he formerly served as deputy chairman of Statoil and is known to admire Mr. Johnsen.

A French oil executive, who was in a downtown Stavanger hotel en route to an offshore drilling platform, said that "the oil story here is far from over and if I had to bet, it would be on all the companies playing a greater role in the expansion for many years to come."

The tests, done 20 years after the workers' first exposure to the material, showed that 31 of 305 wives of shipyard workers in Long Beach, Calif. — all of whom had no known exposure to asbestos outside the household - registered positive X-ray results.

The report was released for the lung association by Dr. Kaye Kilburn, a professor at the University Southern California School of Medicine. It is the first report of asbestosis among family members of shipyard workers.

Discovered at U.S. N-Plant Reactors' Supports Not Properly Built

More Errors

LOS ANGELES - The Pacific Gas and Electric Co. has notified U.S. government authorities that construction errors in supports designed to protect the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant from earthquakes extended to the trays holding the two reactors' electrical cabling system.

A Nuclear Regulatory Commission official said improper construction of the cable tray supports could affect power transmission to the reactors, the electronic control of the reactors and emergency

The regulatory commission confirmed Friday that Pacific Gas had notified it of the additional safety problem in a letter dated Sept. 30. MX, Sensible; B-1, Folly

President Reagan's solution to the MX problem resembles Churchill's comment about democracy: It's the worst system there is, except for all the others. After years of studying dozens of ways to make groundbased missiles invulnerable. Washington finally has admitted the sad truth: None works well. Other methods must be studied. More important, the Reagan proposals acknowledge indirectly that the danger lies in the future; there is time to reduce it and no need to panic over the "window of vulnerability" exploited in the 1980 campaign.

It is a courageous decision. Though politically popular in the West, it will infuriate hawks who think such retreat is perilous, and incite doves who think this interim position senseless. But going slow on the MX this way makes considerable sense.

Too bad the same cannot be said about the president's companion decision to build the B-1 bomber. If the MX course is brave and sensible, this one is folly, a painful waste of billions better devoted to other defense or social needs.

The MX plan begins with steel and concrete. Hardening existing Titan and Minute-man silos, Secretary Weinberger says, will make them safe for the MX until the end of the decade, and at small cost. What he means is that hardening will marginally increase the enormous uncertainties that already deter a Soviet first strike. That politically necessary increase, easier than eating crow, makes it possible to ditch the Rube Goldberg scheme to shuttle 200 missiles around 4,600 concrete Second, a decision on a permanent basing system is wisely deferred for three years.

Meanwhile, research will be stepped up on new basing ideas: in airplanes, or deep underground and defended by anti-ballistic missiles. Other ideas are also worth intensive study, particularly small missile submarines cruising off the continental shelf.

Thus, the racetrack scheme is scrapped, and a lot of ideological garbage with it. With hysteria abated, the plan now is for 100 giant, 10-warhead MX missiles, instead of the 200 that were planned to "match" Moscow's hypothetical first-strike capability. More could be built later, of course. But for the moment there is no talk of a capability for fighting the kind of civilization-ending nuclear war that is euphemistically called "limited." The emphasis is on deterrence and a second-strike capability. All this contributes to the potential for useful arms control negotiations in which, as President Reagan has now said, everything can be on the table.

The main questionable element in Weinberger's grand strategic plan is the costly B-1 bomber - and how much it pumps up the $180-billion cost of the five-year program. It would more than double strategic spending; as a result, conventional forces, if not domestic programs, may be shortchanged. The B-1 is expensive as a bone to throw either to the Air Force in exchange for an MX slowdown or to the Republican right that President Carter outraged when he can-celed the bomber in 1977. Remember, these planes will cost $200 million each. And they are likely to be obsolete before they are deployed. It makes much more sense to concentrate on building one new bomber, the far more important "Stealth" plane, quickly.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

And the Debate Goes On

The Reagan administration had, by all accounts, a devil of a time deciding what to do about the MX missile and the B-1 bomber. Many combinations were inspected, and the arguments evidently did not subside until the end of a months-long review. And now, as is characteristic in these big weapons programs, the president's final choices are being presented as a national imperative, the product of a logic beyond further cavil.

But wait a minute. The decisions on the MX and the B-I are nothing if not eminently arguable. They were arguable before on the inside, and they are arguable now on the outside. Ronald Reagan was able to use his presidential authority to cut short the first debate, but Congress will have to be persuaded in the second. The president, in our judgment, deserves great credit for eliminating the over-elaborate hide-and-seek concept. But questions immediately arise about the ideas he replaced it with.

What needs to be explored first, in respect to the MX, is the nature of the threat that the MX, however and wherever deployed, is designed to meet. Theoretically, as its advocates say, the Soviets could overwhelm American land-based missiles, or threaten to, or leave Americans fearing that they might, and thus paralyze the American capacity or will to retaliate — a process whereby they could reap political gain. But to the extent that such a scenario seems real — and that is much a matter of argument — the MX would not close the perceived current "window of vulnerability" for five-plus years. In the meantime, new technologies will inevitably bring new contingencies and opportunities to mind. Cruise missiles -- cheap, easy to hide, super-accurate --- are already coming on line. In the absence of negotiated limits on the number of Soviet warheads, moreover, how are the Soviets to be kept from covering the MX holes with additional warheads?

We do not say these questions are unanswerable or that answers, to be acceptable, must achieve total buttoned-up, noloose-strings perfection. But any large new procurement decision must seem on the whole reasonably necessary and sensible. Mr.

Reagan still has explaining to do to show that his MX decision meets this standard.

Some of the same kinds of worries attend his statement on the B-1 bomber. Given the great Soviet investment in bomber defense, the availability (and improvability) of Cruise missiles, and the research and development being done on a more detection-proof "Stealth" bomber, not to speak of budget realities, is it really sound to start down the B-1 route? Perhaps it is, but the administration remains under a burden to demonstrate that it has sorted out all these considerations in an orderly way.

Something else needs to be underlined. Procurement plans are not just procurement plans; everyone understands that. They are political plans: They announce a certain attitude toward national security and toward the Soviet Union. So these plans cannot, and are not, being left to the specialists and the strategists. They are being enveloped in the general political debate.

Mr. Reagan is in a position to say he received an electoral mandate to "rearm America" and to achieve "a margin of safety," his term for superiority, over the Soviet Union. He is entitled to represent the MX and the B-1 as his partial delivery on these promises. But is the United States more secure with a missile that Moscow can target any number of new warheads on, and with a bomber with such questionable chances of making it past the Soviet border? "Signals" are not inconsequential: Is the United States going to look stronger several years down the road, when the big costs of these programs hit the budget and start competing with other pressing military needs?

There is a certain tendency in the administration to dismiss doubters as sore losers, softies on the left. But so-called defense conservatives — whose agenda is to strengthen defense, get good defense value for the dollar and maintain steady public support for defense over time - are also concerned. Within their ranks is where we take the center of gravity in the Congress to be. That is where the real defense debate will now begin.

Reagan Proposes a Flaved Armory

Carter's MX plan was a genuine attempt, however clumsy, to meet [the threat of a Soviet first strike]. Reagan's alternative - to develop new weapons but then put them in old, vulnerable holes, even with a bit more concrete on top - looks like the worst of compromises. Most of us, in principle, believe in talking diplomatically and carrying a big stick. But going to Moscow with a stick that you know, and almost certainly they know, to be flawed looks like a recipe for disaster. Fortunately the U.S. Senate, whatever else it lacks, has plenty of knowledgeable military critics. Let us hope they knock Reagan's armory into rather more credible shape. That does not automatically mean either spending more or accelerating the arms race. It should mean a proper assessment of the risks and the means to meet them.

And What About SALT Prospects?

— From The Sunday Times (London).

Mr. Carter was doubtless wrong in 1977 to drop the B-1 project, which was in an advanced stage, without replacing it. But Mr. Reagan errs in the opposite direction by launching these new programs before resuming SALT negotiations with Moscow, which have been broken off since the rejection of the accord signed by Mr. Carter and Mr. Brezhnev in 1979. Washington said that these talks should resume within six months — but suppose the Kremlin then showed itself genuinely well-disposed toward stopping the

"It is our duty to see," the president said. "that there is adequate supervision and control over business, over the use of swollen fortunes. and also over the conditions upon which these fortunes are to be transmitted and the percentage they shall pay the government." Rockefeller protested in an interview in the Cleveland Plain Dealer: "If we limit opportunity, we will have to put brakes on our national development."

LONDON - Britain's Labor Party, which up to the present has managed to maintain a superficially united front, has begun to show signs of cleavage. Tonight, Fenner Brockway, on behalf of the Independent Labor Party, declared that that wing of the labor movement would refuse to accept dictation from the parliamentary party and if necessary would run its candidates in the forthcoming election without the endorsement of the parliamentary Labor Party. It is also understood that efforts are being made to detach more right-wing Laborites from allegiance to Arthur Henderson, the Labor leader, and to induce them to throw in their lot with the national government.

Reagan's Messy Foreign Policy

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — Since World War II, the W United States has had presidents who have personally dominated the foreign policy of the nation —John Kennedy, Richard Nixon and Jimmy Carter, for example — and other presidents such as Harry Truman, who delegated this responsibility to Secre-tary of State Acheson, and Dwight Eisenhower, who left the burden primarily to Secretary of State Dulles. Now we have a president who is neither dealing effectively with foreign policy himself, nor delegating authority to his secretary of state or anybody else. To put the point as gently as possible, this is becoming a bit of a mess.

A Peculiar Commitment For example, at his latest news conference, President Reagan made two points that attracted particu-

 In his opening prepared statement, he said it was his duty to define and defend the broad national security interests of the United States, and that the Congress had an important role in this process. Then, in a clearly calculated shot at the Israelis, he added that "it is not the business of other nations to make

American foreign policy."

An at the same news conference, he then demanded for the United States the right of intervention he had pointedly rejected for Israel. "I have to say that Saudi Arabia we will not permit to be an Iran," he said, and "there's no way that we come at ran," he said, and "there's no way that we could stand by and see that [country] taken over by anyone that would shut

That is both a commitment and a contradiction, made off the cuff without consultation with the Congress, without evidence of a clear threat to the security of Sandi Arabia, without justification for the com-parison with Iran and without the slightest indication of how he could fail to "permit" an internal uprising against the ruling monarchy in Saudi Arabia if one should occur.

Another example: Though the president was quite direct in telling Israel not to interfere directly or indirectly with American foreign policy, he was apparently quite indifferent to the central questions of U.S.-Israeli relations when he met with Prime Minister Begin in Washington last month.

After seeing the president, Begin met with the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Senator Pell of Rhode Island asked him what had been said in the White House about the West Bank and the Israeli settlements there. The prime minister replied that this topic had not been discussed be-

Sen. John Gienn of Ohio said he must have misunderstood the answer to Pell's question. Begin assured him that he had not misunderstood. Glenn then asked, I am told, whether the president had raised the asked, I am total, whether the president had raised the question of using U.S. weapons in the Israeli raids on the nuclear facility in Iraq and on the PLO headquarters in Beiritt. Had any understanding been reached about what were offensive and defensive weapons? Begin's answer was that the president had not talked to him about these matters either.

This misconduct of policy in the Middle East is becoming not only a problem but a bit of a diplomatic scandal. The Israelis are sore about Reagan's public rebuke. The Saudis are bewildered by the conflict between the White House and the Senate over the delivery of the AWACS and other military equipment, and they are furious at Reagan's presumption to speak publicly about what he would "permit" to happen in their country.

Meanwhile, even the Republican leaders in the Senate are irritated by the way the whole AWACS deal has been bungled. First, it was sprung on them without adequate consultation, which allowed time for the opposition to mobilize 50 senators against it. Then Richard Allen, the White House national security adviser, was assigned the job of repairing the

Squabble and Wobble

When Allen talked with Glenn about the possibility that some senators might help arrange a compro-mise with the Sandis for joint control of the AWACS, so that the deal could be accepted by the Senate, so that the deal could be accepted by the Schaus, Secretary Haig protested.

According to The Wall Street Journal, he was reported to have said he didn't want "any [obscenity] senators running foreign policy." Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, the majority leader, was reported to have replied that he didn't want "any [obscenity] sections to the senators. retary of state running the Senate.

So for the time being squabble and wobble is the rule of the day not only on foreign policy but also on defense policy. As a down payment on a more expensive strategic security system later on, the president has asked, as a compromise, for "only" 100 MX missiles and 100 B-1 bombers. The cost for this "interim" program is expected to be $180.3 billion.

The problem is not that Reagan meant to avoid raising the tough questions with Begin, or that he infuriated the Saudis. It is that he is giving the impression that he's a nice guy who doesn't really mean anything, and is neither in charge, nor willing to decide who, if anyone, should be in charge.

Making Use of Hitlers In Fortress Guatemala

By Flora Lewis

sounds emotional. There is an eerie quiet in Guatemala.

Day after day, the newspapers print items like one the day I came: "Unknowns killed 31 peas-ants in Rabinal," a small county. Unknowns" has become a code for armed men on the government side. The item also said that "none of the victims has been identified so far since the residents who remained alive preferred to flee their [four different] villages and no-body knows where to find them."

Col. Jaime Rabanales Reyes, the army spokesman, said correctly that there is no crisis in Guatema la. "But I feel a crisis coming."

So does practically everyone. A smiling taxi driver said, "Either there will be an arrangement after elections or things will get worse. elections or things will get worse. We don't know what we want." A veteran Western diplomat shrugged and said, "It's hopeless, that's all." And a responsible American official said with tight lips, "I don't get embarrassed about things I can't do anything about."

The cynical atmosphere seems worse than the passions of conflict, but it is bound to burst aflame one day. People are killed by the hundreds each week, sometimes decapitated. Nobody really knows how many. Often, nobody knows why.

No Prisoners

Lawyers, teachers, moderate politicians are becoming in short supply. Those who remain live in a numb, almost thoughtless fear. Officials boast chillingly that there are no political prisoners in Guatemala. It seems to be too true. When there is an arrest, a trial, people are sure it's a common criminal because politicos are sim-ply "disappeared" without further

There is a sinister war going on between two cold-blooded groups seeking to dominate by terror. The great bulk of people are caught in between, and if they turn to one side for protection, they know they are marking themselves as targets for the other. Nonetheless, the leftist guerrillas seem to be expanding if only because they lack the capacity to kill so many bystanders as the official forces, and so they concentrate mostly on soldiers and offend ordinary people less.

The government forces, often mable to retaliate directly against the hit-and-run guerrillas, take out their fury on the villagers left be-hind. It isn't hard to pick up firsthand stories, but the sense of outrage is dulled.

President Romeo Lucas García refused to see a recent U.S. conressional delegation, and publicly denounced them as "Communists" when they left. It is hard to imagine room for anyone to the right of President Lucas, but it does exist

Actually, U.S.-Guatemalan relations are very cold, but both sides make a public pretense of getting on nicely. The administration the on neery, inc administration theory that tough regimes will be more amenable if they aren't pressured out loud — as with South. Africa — has been tried here.

U.S. Silence

Nonetheless, U.S. silence and a certain amount of Army equipment — trucks and jeeps — are, seen by others here and by most in the rest of the world as a sign of support for the regime. Inevitably, the United States is coming to appear as an accomplice.

What can do done? At the moment, the answer must be that there is nothing positive. Guate-mala has substantial resources for its widely spread 7 million people. It has oil. The leaders seem pre-pared to withdraw into a kind of Fortress Guatemala, and they have established links outside the Unit-

There are close ties with Argentina and Chile. Israel has traditionally supplied arms, and now South Africa is helping build a weapons factory. Taiwan has the second-largest diplomatic mission and provides technical aid, Seeds of the whirlwind are being sown. The best course for Americans to avoid reaping them would be to disassociate the United States as far as possible from this regime, persuade friends like Israel and Taiwan that they have little to gain from collaboration, and make that America doesn't share Guatemala's outlook.

Balancing Guns and Butter

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — The attack on the W defense budget has begun, and sud-denly this city is like a small room with a large stereo system playing a peculiar record. Arguments that for years have been pouring from the speaker on the left have been adjusted a bit and are pouring from the speaker on the right.

For years liberals have said: We favor a "strong defense program," but we mean by that a "reformed" military, "lean" and purged from "waste," with much procurement postponed until after a "strategic debate." Besides, the key to military strength is not military procurements. Rather, the key is urban renewal and affirmative action and a high minimum wage and — the entire lib-eral agenda. Why? Because only a happy, egalitarian, equitable America can be harmonious at home and a stunning example to the contested Third World.

Now, even as the president commits himself to such strategic systems as the MX missile and the B-1 bomber, some conservatives are saying: We favor a strong defense program, but we mean a reformed military, lean and purged of waste, with procurement postponed until after a strategic debate. Besides, the key to military strength is not military procurements. Rather, the key is a bal-anced budget, a smaller percent of GNP for government, relaxation of the Clean Air Act, drilling in wilderness areas, and — the entire conservative agenda. Why? Because only an economically vigorous America can be militarily strong.

The conservative rationalization, unlike the liberal rationalization, concludes with a truism. However, both are rationalizations for not doing what is unpleasant but neces-sary. And implicit in the conservative argument is the assumption that the U.S. economy cannot match the Soviet buildup.

The Soviet economy is much smaller, and is a tissue of irrationalities. Yet the Soviets spend 85 percent more than the United States on procurement. Americans spend, it sometimes seems, 85 percent of their time and energy concocting reasons why military material is not a necessary response.

There are crises in Poland, in the Gulf and in Central America, but the deadly crisis is in Kansas. I pick that state at ran It is moderate, humane, patriotic, and it fa-vors increased defense spending — until that spending interferes with balancing the budget. It favors a tough foreign policy — short of grain embargoes, naturally. A similar analysis would fit any of the 49 other states. Will a tough foreign policy play in Peoria, III.? Up to a point — the point at which the government, looking for ways of expressing disapproval of the proposed Soviet-to-Germany gas pipeline, considers blocking sale of pipe-laying machines made in Peoria by the Caterpillar Corp.

Many Republicans seem to fear the government in Washington more than the government in Moscow. They say: "The Soviets can't even build good tractors. Why worry?" The answer is: If a war between is fought with tractors, America wins. And if it isn't, perhaps they can be bombarded with copies of the federal budget, prettily bound and

The Soviet Union is losing every race except the one the United States dare not let it win — the arms race. The Third Reich, far from being a masterpiece of Teutonic efficiency, was a jungle of bureaucratic feudalisms. But it could organize a mighty army.

The modest cuts — $13 billion over three years — that the President has proposed for his defense program are not important for their size but for the principle they express. They legitimize treating the defense budget as a target of opportunity in the scramble for scarce resources. As a result, Congress may triple his proposed cuts. A carefully nurtured and terribly fragile consensus in favor of rearmament is being dissipated by an administration that seems to be saying: Rearmament is important - but less important than other goals.

The president is more trustworthy than his party regarding a strong foreign policy. 01981, The Washington Post.

Everyman's Humanism, Nuclear Strategy and a Large Gap

WASHINGTON — In the United States there is nothing like the anti-nuclear movement that is a real political force in Western Europe, but there is a shadow of it, and that shadow is sure to lengthen after the president's announcements on the MX missile and the B-1 bomber.

Now, if the European movement is to be any sort of model, the level of political debate is not going to rise. In Europe, anti-nuclear has turned out to be, on its leading edge, anti-NATO-nuclear, a cuemism for unilateral disarmament and, as such, an escape from strategic difficulty to political dreamland.

Worry Over SALT

Or rather, to political danger-land, since the unilateralists ask little of the Soviet side except that its representatives show up at international conclaves from time to time and agree solemnly that American weapons menace world

But perhaps European unilater-alism will not be the model for Americans. The political culture is different: The détente-minded left is too recently repudiated, too in-completely rehabilitated, and the anti-nuclear core has not built European-type alliances with other special interests. Nor is there the same enlivening fear that the place where one actually lives might be-come somebody else's battlefield.

The greater likelihood in America is sharper public involvement in nuclear budgetary, planning and operational issues that previously were pretty much monopolized on the inside by specialists and on the outside by people who have been raising nuclear alarms for years without getting much of a rise.

If there is a single reason for this sharpening, it is the SALT standoff. Many people, I believe - not just the peaceniks — have been troubled by the accumulation of nuclear arms and by the drift in official discourse toward regarding nuclear war as imaginable, fightable, even winnable.

Gloves Off

But they have felt the force of the perception that the Soviets are piling up bombs at a rate incon-sistent with legitimate defensive purposes. They have been numbed by a consciousness that the whole issue seems so hard for officials, let alone simple citizens, to get a han-

The Fed's Squeeze Play Is Beginning to Show Some Signs of Success

By Jonathan Fuerbringer New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve Board, after years of failure, is finally showing that it can control the U.S. money supply and thus put the squeeze on inflation. The Fed's success so far this year puts hard numbers behind the rhetoric of monetary restraint voiced over the last two years by its chairman, Paul A. Volcker.

"I believe there is now ample evidence that we mean what we say, that the frend of monetary and credit growth is slowing and that our purposes are clear in our actions," Mr.

Volcker said recently.

Perhaps better than the chairman's assertions is the new confidence expressed by some of the Federal Reserve's longtime critics, both inside Reagan administration and in the financial markets. Beryl W. Sprinkel, the undersecretary of the Treasury for monetary affairs and a longtime critic of the Fed, now says unabashedly, "I am very pleased, espe-cially with the last few months."

But the Fed's success has meant grief for many segments of the U.S. economy. Its policy of slow monetary growth, in the current economic environment, has put housing in near ruins, autos in trouble and the thrift industry in anguish.

And top Pederal Reserve officials acknowledge that all this economic disruption could try the willingness of the country to put up with a cure for inflation that is both

"There is a genuine concern," said Lyle E. Gramley, a governor on the Federal Reserve Board, "that the country might not put up with the medicine. Before, people were (Continued on Page 9, Col.1)

Changes in EMS Alignment Elicit Cautious Approval

From Agency Dispatches
PARIS — Government financial sources greeted the realignment in the European Monetary System with cautious approval Sunday night, generally arguing that the changes would have no drastic effect on trade flows or inflation

But West German and Dutch analysts said they expect a slight weakening in the dollar against European currencies as an initial reaction to the reshuffle. A weaker dollar would take some of the pressure off domestic interest rates and effectively lower the price of petroleum for Europeans because oil transactions are priced in dollars. Regan Says Fed Should Relax Money Policy To Help Set Stage for Economic Rebound and Caroline Arkinson WASHINGTON -- U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald, T. Regan, concerned that the economy may be in a recession, says the Federal Reserve should loosen its tight-money policies.

By John M. Berry

Mr. Regan stressed in an interwir. Regan stressed in an inter-view Friday that he was not calling for an "easy-money" policy. "What we are trying to do this time, and I know the Fad is as sensitive to this as I am is to anticipate that and not stay in a low [money] supply mode any longer than is necessary in the down-turn."

But with interest rates still at levels so high that they are jeapor-dizing the administration's predicted economic recovery, worried administration economists want the Fed, one way or another, to get in-terest rates down and boost growth of the money supply.

Mr. Regan declined to say exactly how much of a change he wants in Federal Reserve policy, particularly whether he believes the central bank's targets for money growth for 1982 are too low. Federal Reserve officials have told Mr. Regan and his administration colleagues that the targets, de-signed to combat inflation, will not provide enough money to finance the sort of booming recovery the administration wants.

"I'm not going to try to tell the Fed, since I am secretary of the Treasury and they're an independ-ent group, exactly what mechaus to use in order to do this," Mr. Rogan said. But the result, he said, would be a sufficiency of money to enable the economy to

But he said he thought the financial markets are beginning to recognize the "flat period" the economy is in, and is becoming more realistic about the possibility that the Fed will have to ease its money policies eventually.

Forecast Unchanged

Officially, the administration has not changed its forecast that the economy, after adjustment for inflation, will grow by 5.2 percent during 1982. Mr. Regan maintained that after three flat quarters in a row, including the current one, "the recovery will start in the first quarter of 1982,"

New York Times Service

PARIS - The cloak of anonymity has been lifted from the Paris gold market, and the French people don't like it.

As of last Thursday, France's Socialist government closed a possible loophole in its new plan to tax wealth by requiring that buyers of gold disclose their names and addresses, the prices paid and the quantities exchanged. All this in-formation must be recorded and preserved for inspection by the fisc," as France's tax collectors are known.

The government moved against anonymous trading because it feared, for one, that wealthy citizens would convert more visible assets into gold ingots and coins to protect them from its proposed new taxes. Earlier last week the government announced plans to mpose a wealth tax ranging from 0.5 percent to 1.5 percent on fortunes of more than 3 million francs. There is a need for new tax ment's proposed 788.1-billion-franc ($143.3 billion) budget.

The move to end anonymity has sent a note of panic through the Paris gold market, where prices dropped sharply Thursday and again Friday. The 20-franc gold Napoleon coin, a favorite of smaller French hoarders, fell 9 francs Friday, to 981 francs, or about $178, after tumbling 46 francs Thursday. The gold ingot lost 4.295 francs Thursday and 3,140 francs Friday to close at 87,390 francs, or about $15,889. An ingot weighs about 2.2 pounds

(1 kilogram).

Trading volume, which had dwindled to 9 million francs Thursday, picked up sharply Fri-day, reaching 27 million francs. But at this level, it was still well below the volume of 40 million to 50 million francs worth of daily trading that the Paris market recorded earlier in the week. "Money has been going into gold since the Socialist victory because it was anonymous," said Hubert Ravier, a partner in Ravier & Tuffier, a French brokerage house.

"Now there's less interest. Business was also down sharply at the many small gold dealing establishments, most of them near the Bourse, where small investors buy gold coins and ingots over the counter for cash.

en a big lift to the black market in gold, which began on a small scale here four years ago to evade a 6 percent tax on gold transactions and a ban on the import and export of the precious metal. Friday, brokers reported that "unrecorded" Napoleon coins are selling at about 1,100 francs — a premium of nearly 30 percent above the official price.

Another way to beat the new rules, several brokers said, is by registering purchases and sales of gold under an assumed name, using a false identity card or passport. "Every Frenchman will soon have a real identity card and a 'gold' identity card," one dealer

The French government's at-tempt to keep tabs on gold sales is only one of a number of new es announced last week that are intended to stop the rich from evading the wealth tax the Socialists are planning. In the future, all purchases of art, jewelry or antiques worth more than 5,000 francs must be paid for with an endorsed check that can only be cleared through a bank account. French insurance companies.now must also report to the tax authorities details of all policies covering jewelry, art and antiques with a value of more than 100,000 francs, thus helping establish the true value of every taxpay er's possessions.

But bankers say that these measures, designed to insure that the government gets the maximum yield possible from its new taxes, will also encourage the flight of capital from the country and further weaken the franc at a time when it is already under heavy "It's expropriation; our business pressure on currency markets.

World Bank, IMF Adjourn on Negative Note

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The World Bank and International Monetary Fund concluded their 36th annual meeting on the twin notes that world economic conditions would get worse before they get better and that there is a strong need to coordinate anti-inflationary policies to avoid a world depression.

High interest rate policies in the United States, which have contributed to slower world economic growth, came under attack in some of the formal statements presented Friday by representatives of the 143 members of the two international lending institutions.

But the general mood among 2,000 official delegates and about 13,000 private bankers and economists who converged on Washington for the weeklong meeting was that of resigned acceptance of fur-ther belt-tightening. They see it as the only way out of the situation of high worldwide inflation, rising unemployment and prospects of a continuation of low fiving stand-

Much was said of the need for economic restructuring following the call by President Reagan for greater self-help and more reliance on the private sector for development assistance.

The conference chairman, Valentin Arismendi Eigue of Uraguay, in providing a consensus of the gathering, said that though they could entail "further sacrifices, appropriate adjustment poli-cies could indeed lead to a decline in indebtedness, a reduction of public spending and an easing of the pressures that have given rise to the current high interest rates." Federal Reserve tight money polimonetary system, in which nations would seek to keep their currencies within a range of permissible gold within a range of permissible gold price fluctuations, would bring fi-nancial stability and benefit all countries. But his remarks aroused little interest.

> Both Mr. de Larosiere and the World Bank's new president, A.W. Clausen, called attention to the plight of the poorest nations now facing reduced aid as a result of the economic squeeze in the industrial countries.

> Mr. Clansen said he would fight to prevent the aid programs from unraveling, citing the strategic importance of many of the aid recipients as well as the stimulus that their development would provide for exports of the United States and other industrial countries.

U.S. Rescinds Curbs on Gasoline Exports

WASHINGTON - The United States has lifted export controls on gasoline and jet fuel first imposed after the Arab oil embargo, saying they are no longer needed to insure "adequate supplies" for U.S. con-

The controls were first imposed in January, 1974, and sharply limited the amount of oil products that could be shipped overseas from U.S. oil refineries.

Beginning Friday, the administration said refiners could sign contracts with overseas customers for whatever quantity of gasoline, jet fuel, naptha and light fuel oil they could sell. A simple export licease is all that will be required, according to the Commerce De-

ing capacity in the United States." erce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said. "Export controls are no longer needed to ensure adequate supplies of gasoline and other petroleum products for American consumers

U.S. refineries have been operating at about 70 percent of capaci-

Exports were limited by company and country of destination. Last year, exports amounted to about 42,000 barrels of refined products a day, less than 0.3 percent of the world demand.

But because of the continuing oversupply of oil in the world mar-ket, potential buyers will have little incentive to look to the United States for additional supplies of reinterest. fined products, despite the lifting of the export controls.

"We think frankly, there will not be any surge in exports," said Vincent DeCain, a Commerce Department export specialist. In 1980 the industry reached less than half of the quota limit, about 15 million barrels, opposed to a ceiling of 32 million, he said. The lifting of controls came as a surprise to the oil industry, cur-rently focused on a similar issue of far larger dimensions, the continuing limits on the exports of Alaskan North Slope crude. Those limits cannot be removed without congressional approval.

A Cabinet council is currently studying the question of whether to ask Congress to lift the 1976 ban on exports of Alaskan crude, but White House sources say no worried that the Fed might cave in.

Now they are beginning to worry that we may not cop out." Mr. Gramley added: "It is easy to sit here from a textbook knowledge and say it is worth it. It is another thing to convince the people who are suffering that it is

But Mr. Gramley argues that there is no alternative. "If the Fed turns around now, we will lose all the progress that we have paid so dearly for," he said. Mr. Voicker recently echoed the same sentiment when asked what it would take to ease the Fed's tight policy.
"Impeachment," the chairman said with a laugh.

In achieving success thus far, the Fed is finally answering the tradi-tional skepticism of the financial markets, born of years of disap-pointment. Watch what the Fed does, not what it says, the markets

In 1979, and especially in 1980, while Mr. Voicker was talking about restraint, the money supply ligures went every way but on target, resulting in much criticism for the chairman.

In the six months that enged with September, the closely watched M-IB — a measurement of the money supply that com-prises currency in circulation, reg-ular checking accounts and the new interest- bearing checking ac-counts called NOW accounts grew at an annual rate of 3.9 per-cent, well below the Fed's target of 6 to 8.5 percent for the year.

Below Target

When this measurement is ad-justed for the large inflows into NOW accounts, the Fed has been equally restrictive. The adjusted M-1B crept upward at an annual rate of 1.7 percent from the begin-ning of the year through Aug. 31. This was far below the 3.5-to-6 Percent target range.

Although the Fed has moved to increase M-1B's growth toward the bottom of its target range over the maintain that M-IB, both adjusted and unadjusted, will still be below the bottom of the target range by the end of 1981.

Evidence in support of that came Priday, when the central bank announced a larger-than-ex-pected $1.9-billion decline in M-1B. The figures strengthened the conviction of some analysis that short-term interest rates would decline in the near future,

While M1-B is still below its target, M-2 — which consists of M-1B plus money market funds, savings and small time deposits — is over the top of its target. Aug. 31, M-2 was growing at an annual rate of 10.3 percent, which is above the Fed's target range of 6 to 9 per-

Mr. Volcker, however, declares that the Fed is watching both mon-ey supply gauges closely. Taken to-gether — with one under its target gether — with one uncer us target — they mean that the Fed's overall restriction of money supply growth is on target, he says.

This tight policy, notes Charles J. Partee, another Fed governor, has also enabled the Fed for the first time to keep the money supply under reasonable control during a recovery from a recession. The Fed has traditionally lost the battle during such periods.

And, Mr. Gramley says, the Fed can take some credit for the decline in the rate of inflation. Mr. Gramley acknowleges that slower increases in food and oil prices has contributed the most to the decline in the rate of inflation to singledigit levels for the year. But he in-sists that the Fed's tight monetary policy has helped by raising the value of the dollar and thus making imports chesper. And high in-terest rates, he adds, have brought down speculation in commodities and the prices of raw industrial ments begins to decline. That makes 1982, the beginning of the next round of major labor talks, a critical year for the Fed and infla-

The Fed's chance at victory finally comes two years after the Fed, under Mr. Vokker's leadership, changed its techniques for controlling money growth. The Fed took its eyes off interest rates and put them on bank reserves, letting interest rates go where they may, within reason.

The first try, in 1980, was a disaster. The money supply, shrunk by the Carter administration's credit controls in March and stretched by an unexpected economic recovery in the summer, swerved out of control for most of

There are several reasons for the Fed's success this year as opposed to 1980. First, there were no credit controls this year. Next, the Fed has had the full backing of the Reagan administration.

But the key change is that the red, in 1961, decided that it had to act quickly to stop any apparent buge in the money supply while remaining patient if the money supply expanded too slowly. This meant that if the Fed was going to make a mistake, unlike in the past, it would be toward being too tight eather than too loose rather than too loose.

For the economy, a growing belief that the Fed's policy can work means that its attempt to curb in-flation could be easier in the long run. In the financial markets, con-fidence that the Fed can and will continue the fight against inflation could hasten a turnaround of inflation expectations.

But doubts still linger. H. Erich Heinemann of Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York, worries that the effort this summer to lift M-1B might backfire. But the money supply figures have not shown such a mistake yet. Now the Fed is trying to sell the country on a safety valve - release that could take some of the strain off the Fed, the economy and in-terest rates and improve the odds of keeping the anti-inflation drive on track. If the Fed is going to keep up the pressure, the adminis-tration and Congress can ease it only with spending cuts or new tax revenues and smaller budget deficits, the Fed contends. While he acknowledges the success of the first round of federal budget cuts, Mr. Volcker has made clear that much of the added pressure the economy is now facing — because of threatened growing def-icits — comes from the three-step tax cut the administration won in Congress. Mr. Volcker has said be was never enthusiastic about the tax cut because it makes reducing deficits more difficult - and thus it makes fighting inflation more

As for the economic pain that has accompanied the Fed's tight monetary policy, the outlook for next year is not much better, at least for the first six months. While the Reagan administration continues to forecast a recovery and a significant drop in interest rates, top officials at the Federal Reserve are more pessimistic.

Thomas Thomson, a former Fed economist who is now at the Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, calls the Fed's mone-tary goals for 1982 "no-growth" targets. He says the Fed is squeezing too hard.

"You can overplay the hand," Mr. Thomson argued. "And the danger is that this will cause sorious economic disruptions and force the Fed into a classic response — overcompensating on the other side."

Economic analysts said the lira's devaluation coupled with the mark's 5.5 percent revaluation would help Italian exports to West Germany, which is a major market for Italian goods.

An Italian government statement maintained that the 3-percent devaluation of the lira would no result in sharp weakening of the currency. A Cabinet statement said Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini's five-party coalition had presented a rigorously anti-inflationary budget to Parliament at the end of last month and the measures set out in it were sufficient to protect Italy's official reserves.

anniversary of the bank, Mr. Alkhimov did not give any indication of Moscow's short-term gold trading policies.

The Soviet Union recorded an unexpectedly large trade deficit of 2.61 billion rubles ($3.66 billion) with the major non-Communist countries in the first half of this year, more than double the figure for the first half of 1980.

Western diplomats believe Moscow's foreign currency reserves will be further depleted by record grain imports this year. But they say the Soviet government would be unlikely to sell gold until the world market price recovers from its present low level.

The Soviet Union and South Africa are the world's biggest producers of gold. Moscow has never given statistics on its total output, but Western estimates put its 1980 production at around 300 metric tons, compared with South Afri-ca's 674 metric tons.

U.K. Telecom SeveredFrom Post Office

New York Times Service

LONDON — Britain's unitary approach of keeping telephone, telecommunications and postal services in one organization — the British Post Office — ended last week when British Telecom, which operates Britain's telephone and telecommunications system, was formally split from the Post Office. The move lays the foundation for a relaxation of Telecom's monopoly status. The introduction of competition, however, will proceed slowly and falls far short of a complete denationalization of the in-

Telecom will remain govern-ment-owned indefinitely, which so far has meant that the company has been unable to go beyond spending limits set by the government to raise money for its costly modernization program. In the first phase, the govern-ment has granted other companies the right to sell terminal equipment, from telephone sets to more sophisticated telecommunications equipment. to Telecom customers, although Telecom retains the right to install the first telephone on any premise.

In the second phase, outside companies will be allowed to sell services ranging from private ment, from telephone sets to more services, ranging from private switchboards to data transmission, which Telecom already provides. All new services, however, must be government-licensed.

The big question is whether the government will allow private companies to install their own networks in direct competition with those of Telecom.

A state-run company to be denationalized later this year might be one of Telecom's competitors:

Cable and Wireless, which operates overseas telecommunications systems, mainly in the British Commonwealth, has formed the Mercury consortium with Barclays Merchant Bank and the British Pemerchant Bank and the brush re-troleum Company to provide a commercial intercity network that would be laid along the tracks of British Rail, another state-run enterprise.

Also, a consortium led by N.M. Rothschild & Sons, the London merchant bank, recently acquired an 80-percent share in a company that owns 160 miles of pipes lying beneath London. If government approval is granted, the Rothschild group would insert telecommunications lines through the

Florida State Upsets Ohio State, 36-27

From Agency Dispatches
COLUMBUS, Ohio — Quarterback Rick
Stockstill passed for 299 yards and two touchdowns Saturday to lead Florida State to a 3627 college football victory over previously undefeated Ohio State.

Stockstill completed 25 of 41 pass attempts and threw touchdown passes of 14 yards to Tony Johnson and 7 yards to Sam Childers.

Florida State overcame a record-setting passing performance by Ohio State's quarter-back, Art Schlichter, who completed 31 of 52 attempts for 458 yards and two touchdowns. The previous single game yardage record was 312, set by John Borton against Washington State in 1952. Schlichter also broke the school records for completions and attempts.

After the Seminoles took a 30-21 lead in the third quarter on Stockstill's second touchdown pass. Schlichter moved Ohio State to the 2-yard line on a 60-yard pass from Schlichter to Gary Williams. But the Buckeyes failed to score on three running plays, and tight end Brad Dwelle dropped a fourth-down pass from Schlichter in the end zone. Florida State then moved 99 yards in nine plays for what proved to be the winning touchdown, with Rick Williams going in from the 3-yard line.

USC 56, Oregon State;22

In Corvallis, Ore., tailback Marcus Allen rushed for 233 yards on 35 carries as top-ranked Southern California rolled over Oregon State, 56-22, in a Pacific-10 Conference game. Allen, who sat out the final quarter, became the first college player to gain more than 200 yards in four consecutive games. The 6-foot-2, 202-pound senior has gained 925 yards this season, breaking the four-game record of 905 yards set by Greg Pruitt of Oklahoma in 1971. Allen scored on runs of 30, 8 and 13 yards as the Trojans took a 42-17 halftime lead.

In University Park, Pa_ tailback Curt Warner, the nation's second-leading rusher. scored two touchdowns as Penn State shut out Temple, 30-0. Warner carried 22 times for 117 yards to boost his season rushing total to 496 yards. He scored the Nittany Lions' first two touchdowns on runs of 3 and 19 yards.

Pittsburgh 42, South Carolina 28

In Columbia, S.C., Dan Marino threw six touchdown passes, a school record, as Pitts-burgh beat South Carolina, 42-28. After being thwarted at South Carolina's 8yard line on their first offensive drive, the unbeaten Panthers scored on a Marino pass the next three times they had the ball. They in-creased their lead to 35-0 in the third quarter. Marino, a junior, also established a school career record of 38 touchdown passes. Matt Cavanaugh threw 32 touchdown passes for Pittsburgh between 1974 and 1977.

North Carolina 28, Georgia Tech 7

In Atlanta, quarterback Rod Elkins scored the tie-breaking touchdown in the third quar-ter and passed for another score 55 seconds later in No.th Carolina's 28-7 victory over Georgia Tech in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Two plays after Elkins' 1-yard touchdown run, the Tar Heels recovered a fumble at the Tech 31, and they scored on a 3-yard pass from Elkins to Tyrone Anthony.

Iowa State 7, Oklahoma 7

In Norman, Okla., tailback Dwayne Crutchfield ran 3 yards for a touchdown midway through the fourth quarter to give Iowa State a 7-7 tie with Oklahoma in a Big Eight Conference game. The Sooners had taken a 7-0 lead on a 16-yard run by Steve Sewell, a freshman halfragt on their second possession. Lat in halfback, on their second possession. Late in the game, lowa State had a first down on the Oklahoma 9-yard line, but Crutchfield could get no closer than the 6 in three carries.

Notre Dame 20, Michigan State 7

in South Bend, Ind., tailback Greg Bell scored a pair of first-quarter touchdowns as Notre Dame ended a two-game losing streak with a 20-7 victory over Michigan State.

Michigan 38, Indiana 17

In Bloomington, Ind., Butch Woolfolk rushed for 176 yards and two touchdowns as Michigan beat Indiana, 38-17, in the Big Ten. Texas Christian 28, Arkansas 24

In Fort Worth, Texas, Steve Stamp threw a pair of fourth-quarter touchdown passes to Stanley Washington as Texas Christian rallied for a 28-24 Southwest Conference victory over previously unbeaten Arkansas.

Yale 23, Navy 19

In New Haven, Conn., John Rogan passed for 202 yards and Fred Leone recovered three fumbles as Yale scored a 23-19 victory over Navy. The unbeaten Elis erased a 19-16 deficit late in the game on a 24-yard pass from Rogan to Curt Grieve after a short Navy punt.

Missouri 14, Mississippi State 3 In Jackson, Miss., Bobby Meyer ran 4 yards for one touchdown and caught a 2-yard pass for another as undefeated Missouri beat Mississippi State, 14-3.

Alabama 38. Mississippi 7

In Tuscaloosa, Ala., Alabama used a fumble recovery and an intercepted pass to set up first-half touchdown runs by Jeff Fagan and Linnie Patrick and went on to defeat Mississippi, 38-7. It was Bear Bryant's 310th coach-struck by a painting, we say it looks so real? This comes to mind with "The Last Ambassador," a first novel by Bernard and Marvin Kalb, brothers who are not only crackerjack broad-cast journalists but who have also demonstrated what they can do in nonfiction books. "The Last Ambas-sador" is a novel that doesn't come off so much as fiction but will keep you reading because of the history it is drawn from and the knowledge of the authors, who were there.

It is about Vietnam, the fall of Saigon in 1975. The U.S. ambassador feels that his country's honor demands sending aid to South Vietnam

The Kalbs give us the feel of Saigon in its death throes, of the diplomatic community, of the Vietnamese torn as much as their country was.

Stereotypes

This is good reporting, writing that delivers the smell of defeat, the swear of despair. However, this does not carry through in the treatment of the main characters, who come off at rather cardboard stereotypes. It is here that the novelist faces the challenge that the newsman does not; he must create a character with depth and personality who also may or may not be a type.

The historian and newsman must penetrate the character of the person they have under scrutiny. The Kallinger newsmen and they have a problem in fashioning a full person from the ground up; dealing in fact can be barrier when it comes to creating in factors, Still, "The Last Ambassadors and quick read one that have is a good quick read, one that has truth and action and a moral that we should never let dim in the national

CHESS.

THERE is a player on the international tournament circuit who is notorious for prematurely resigning. Unwilling to suffer — as one must in a clearly inferior position - he gives up at the first provocation.

Yet opponents do not play perfectly and should be given the opportunity to bobble the game back to us. Within reason, of course — it would be an exercise in futility to continue a piece-down, no-compensation position in top-level competition.

Consider the encounter between the international masters Nick DeFirmian and John Grefe in the 11th round of the United States Open Championship in Palo Alto, Calif. After an overly aggressive opening had rebounded to his disadvantage, DeFirmian did not lose heart but struggled tenaciously to get back into the game. Vacillating play by his opponent gave him the chance and he went on to win.

In the Taimanov variation, the point of 6 . . . KN-K2 is to follow with 7 ... NxN; 8 QxN, N-B3, but this was prevented by 7 N-N3. Mark Taimanov used the retreat 10 ... N-B1, intending a later ... N-N3 and ... N-B5, in a similar position against me in Leningrad in 1973; it is far superior to 10...N-N3, which leaves the knight vulnerable to P-KR4 and Psive 12 0-0-07! Q-B2; 13 P-B5?! (aiming for 14 PxP, PxP; 15 B-R3) was beaten back by Grefe's 13 ... P-N5; 14 N-N1, P-K4, and now it was the White king's situation that had become critical.

However, Grefe failed to press his attack with 18 . . . P-R6!, one point being that DeFirmian could not then keep his king position closed with 19 P-N3 because 19 . N-R4 would create the indefensible threat of 20 . . . Q-B6! Later, after 20 N-B4, Grefe again could have had a powerful attack with 20 . . . P-R6!

Of course, his 20 ... N/3-Q5 was enticing, but it permitted DeFirmian to offer the exchange with 21 BxN, PxB; 22 RxP, NxR (22 ... P-R61 was still possible); 23 QxN. After 23 ... 0-0; 24 N-N61, Grefe returned the exchange with 24 ... B-B3; 25 NxR, RxN, since 24 ... R-R2; 25 N-Q5 would have allowed Defirmian to win the QNP and thus obtain two pawns to go with his minor piece for a rook. piece for a rook.

Grefe finally got around to playing 26... P-R6, but the foregoing simplification gave DeFirmian the chance for an ingenious defense with 27 BxB, PxP; 28 N-Q3, B-B6; 29 Q-K21 Grefe could not recapture with 29
... RxB without permitting 30
NxP/4!, R-R6; 31 N-Q5! to be followed by 32 NxB.

First Title for Canadians

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — Canada
received its first baseball title Saturday when the Montreal Expos rallied to defeat the New York Mets. 5-4, and clinch the secondhalf championship in the National League East. On Wednesday they will begin a best-of-five series against the Philadelphia Phillies. who won the first-half championship, for the divisional title.

In the National League West the Houston Astros became the second-season division winners when the Cincinnati Reds lost to the Atlanta Braves, 4-3. It did not matter that the Astros lost to the Dodgers, 7-2, and, as second-half champions, the Astros will play the Dodgers for the divisional championship, beginning Tuesday in Los Angeles.

The Mets led, 3-0, before the Expos railied in the middle innings. They finally captured the lead in the seventh off Neil Allen and added a critical run in the eighth on Jerry Manuel's two-out double that put them ahead by 5-3. It was critical because Mike Cubbage belted a pinch-hit home run for the Mets in the bottom of the eighth. cutting the Expo lead to 5-4 with three outs to go.

No Help From Pirates

Scoreboard-watchers could see the drama building: In Pittsburgh, the second-place St. Louis Cardinals held a commanding lead over the Pirates, so the Expos could count on no help.

"You bet I look at the scoreboard," Jim Fanning, the manager of the Expos, had said. "I'd rather not, but I can't avoid it. The scoreboard's in right field and the pitcher's mound is in a direct line with

With the Mets ahead, 3-0, the Expos finally scored in the fifth. With one down, Jerry Manuel singled to left field and Chris Speier looped a single into left that bounced away from Dave Kingman for an error. The Expos had runners on second and third, and they got one home when Brad Mills pinch-hit a groundout to first

One inning later, the Expos crept closer. Ed Lynch, pitching in relief of Mike Scott since the second inning, retired the first two batters, then went to a full count on Gary Carter, But Carter pulled the next pitch down the left-field line, a low shot that cleared the railing in the porch, and the Mets' lead was cut to 3-2 with three inn-

Before the game, Jeff Reardon glanced across the field at the Mets, who traded him to the Expos in May, and made a prediction.

"I know these guys," Reardon said. They'll bring in Neil Allen in the seventh inning and try to hut us down.'

Sure enough, the Mets did bring hallen in the seventh, but he did Lot shut the Expos down. In fact, Montreal went to its bench for belp and the reserves replied with Fwo runs and the lead.

First, though, Frank Tayeras rooted Terry Francona's grounder or a leadoff error. Manuel tried to Funt Francona to second, but Aluall to second for the forceout. hen came the bench. John vilner, another onetime Met, h inch hit for Speier and singled to night, chasing Manuel to third.

U.S. and Argentina Advance To Davis Cup Tennis Final

United Press International PORTLAND, Ore. - John McEnroe and Peter Fleming, the top doubles team in the world, defeated Peter McNamara and Phil Dent of Australia, 8-6, 6-4, 8-6, on Saturday to give the United States a victory in its Davis Cup tennis semifinal series.

Following singles victories by McEnroe and Roscoe Tanner on Friday, the United States took a decisive 3-0 lead in the best-of-fiveseries, which was to conclude Sun-

United States. Verbal Abuse

The victory by McEnroe and Fleming was fairly routine except for verbal outbursts by the Americans in the third set over rulings by umpire Bill Kempffer of Canada. The U.S. team received two warnings from Kempffer.

Australia was hampered in its bid to upset the United States by the loss of its No. 2 player, Paul McNamee, who was kept out of action by a back injury. In the 81-year history of Davis Cup play, the competition between the United States and Australia has been the most competitive se-ries. The Americans now have a 21-17 edge over the Australians in their head-to-head meetings.

Close Call on Near Miss

By William Safire

TEW YORK — A miss used to be as good as a mile. Under the pressure of airline euphemism (which turned "safety belts" into "seat belts"), a moment of danger to two aircraft was dubbed a "near

One striking air traffic control-ler told me, reports David Shaffer, of The Express in Easton, Pa., "that near misses' was sounds better than 'near colling coined because it than 'near collisions." He also told me that air traffic controllers refer to such Safire evenus as 'deals.' Presumably, a near miss by two 747s would be a big deal. Since it is now in the interest of the unemployed controllers to cast aspersions on airline safety, their union's press releases reject the euphemism and issue "reports of near midair collisions." Whatever you think of the union's cause, you have to agree with its terminology: The event described is nearly a collision," and not "nearly a missed collision."

LANGUAGE never stays the same in the airline world. I had finally talked myself into calling the stewardess a sexless "flight attendant" when the nice young woman on New York Air crossed me up and renamed herself a "customer-service attendant." Since that verges on the redundant, many of us have returned to calling her a stewardess, or, if we are unafraid of getting coffee in our laps, a

Again, union terminology is in the air: With unionized air carriers, the term "customer-service representative" is usually applied to people who provide special services on the ground, like writing tickets or meeting mean little kids;

Religious Finds

The Associated Press AVELLINO, Italy — Excava-tions at the site of a medieval church at the nearby town of Pratola, discovered during the recent rehabilitation work for earthquake victims, have produced a number of ancient treasures, including manuscripts and gold artifacts, lo-

"flight attendant" is reserved for those who have extra training in safety or food handling, and who fly. Eastern Airlines, which is unionized, looks askance at non-U New York Air and sniffs that the newcomer's "customer-service attendants" are not specialists in stewardessing. New York Air responds by calling its flight at-tendants "in-flight customer-ser-vice representatives," which may be difficult to fit on a call button. On occasion, airlinese triumphs. I am caving in on "We will be taking off momentarily." Time was, "momentarily" meant "for a moment," and not "in a moment." I pause momentarily in respect for a word that has changed its meaning. The current meaning of "momentarily" is "very soon," or "it won't be long now, folks," or "as soon as the stew finds the hanas soon as the stew linus the handle on the rear door." Straight talkers prefer "in a moment" or the slightly more delayed "soon," but if you're in a hurry for a multiplication of the slightly more than the straight and the slightly are the slightly and the slightly are the slightly and the slightly are the sli tisyllabic affectation, you may use "momentarily."

MEG GREENFIELD, the Newsweek columnist who single-handedly torpedoed "watershed" as a Washington cliche, has been off on an etymological dig.

"Have you noticed how often people have been using 'knock your socks off?" she inquired. Not wanting to be the last on Pundit Row to notice a vogue term, I mut-tered that I had been tracking the phrase for months and was convinced it was a recent knock-off of knock your block off, which in turn was rooted in knock off one's feet or bowl over .

Greenfield then flashed her find: In "The Beechers, An American Family in the 19th Century, by Milton Rugoff, a letter is quot-- written about 1844 - from Charles Beecher, pastor of the Fort Wayne, Ind., Second Presbyterian Church, which includes this; Beecher, you must put in your best licks today! You must knock the socks off those Old School

The use of "lick" to mean "smart blow" has been traced by the Oxford English Dictionary to the 15th century, and is probably of a Scottish origin, rooted in "to lick on the whip." But nobody, to my knowledge, has previously unearthed socks that were knocked off as far back as the 1840s. In awe of this find, etymologists are standing around barefoot

Recipe for a London Restaurateur

ONDON - England produces fine cook-→ books, superb food scholars, excellent basic ingredients, and even a few good res-taurants. But the actual eating of food is a comparatively minor event. It is certainly not the reason why people go to restaurants.

"In England the food is not important. In France or Italy if you eat well, you don't care who is next to you. Here they say who are these people?" says Enzo Apicella, a jovial Neopolitan with poached blue eyes, a droopy mustache and an unassailable track record for creating fashionable London restaurants. A computer printout of the ideal restaurant for the English, he says, would include near-empty rice bowls of Third World plats de jour with the proceeds going to Oxfam.

That would satisfy the English love for charity and the snobbery of going to a place where there is nothing to eat.

"You get no cooperation Apicella from the customer here. In Paris and Italy people complain. Here they say nothing and then don't come back. When you find your restaurant empty you realize something is wrong."

Next week, or perhaps the week after. Apicella will open his newest London restaurant, a former Lebanese nosheria now called Apicella. It is on Mill Street, a tiny West End block that throbs with London verisme two sleazy nightchubs and a Rolls-Royce agency. "It sums up London," Apicelia says happily.

Burgler Deterrent

The new restaurant holds only 64 customers and has in its window a life-size wax dummy of Apicella that until now has been used to scare burglars away from his Chelsea

Location is important: a restaurant should be just off a main thoroughfare, Apicella says. His new place is not far from Bond Street and he hopes to attract artists and dealers and to keep away the sort of people who worry about parking space, of which

The food will be traditional Italian: the problem is of course the people. "The prob-lem in England is to keep awful people away because they are always climbing." The restaurant's calling card lists the telephone number in a way so secretive, says Apicella, that only a 9-year-old boy or a computer expert could decipher it. He also thought of putting a very narrow door on his restaurant so only thin people could get in.

Most of the names of the Swinging '60s are now forgotten: Apicella is a survivor. Who these days can still identify Justin de Vil-leneuve, Julie Driscoll, John Stephen, to say nothing of Alvaro and Mario and Franco, Apicella's peers in starting the trattoria trend. Italian restaurants were just right for the '60s world: The food demanded no gastro-nomic experience, Apicella's sleek and cool decors were reassuringly classless and tren-dy; the cheerful Italian waiters were as welcoming to stars without ties or aitches as to chinless wonders in pinstripes. The restaurants became showcases and people came to be seen. "Why not?" said a writer at the time. "At these prices you want to be observed at

PEOPLE: Charles Needs $4,500 More A Week for Married Life

Prince Charles discovered (wo cannot live as cheaply as one and has given himself a tax-free 50-per-cent pay raise of $4,500 a week to meet the extra costs of married life. "In these times everyone has to make ends meet," said a spokesman for Buckingham Palace. The prince said he now would take 75 percent of the $990,000 he earns annually from estates he owns as Duke of Cornwall. Since his 21st birthday he has kept half the reve-mes and given half to the state. The spokesman said Prince Charles was faced with rising expenses since his July 29 marriage to Diana. "In particular there will be the additional cost of maintaining a separate establishment at Kensington Palace and a considerable increase in the size of the Prince and Princess of Wales household," the spokesman said.
